

Important!

Packed aisles necessitate stringent rules—no triffles tolerated. We expect further panic of bargain-seekers Monday, and ask your patience accordingly; and while there will be no compulsion on your part to purchase, yet we want the buyers and room for them. You will not be urged nor coaxed by salespeople to buy, but you must act quickly.

Whole store a wreck of values. Facts beyond a shadow of a doubt. No make-believe reductions here. We don't want to bring a lot of people here on a wild-goose chase. If we cannot secure business legitimately, we do not want it at all. There isn't a day but what our daring doings are giving a jar to some of the old ways of merchandising. Beginning Monday, we will surprise you still further. Look for no fancy dress windows.

MORE THAN FIVE HUNDRED

List of Those Which Belonged to Virginia Troops and Where They Were Captured.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 27.—There are five hundred and forty-four Confederate flags in the War Department. The flags were sent to the department as they were captured by the generals commanding the armies in the field. The Secretary of War thinks some of the flags may have reached the department through some other channel. Of the whole number of flags thus sent to the department, 225 were United States flags captured by the Confederates and recaptured by the Federal troops, and 54 were Confederate flags taken by the United States troops, making a total of 280 in the custody of the department. When received they were deposited in a vacant attic in a building on Seventeenth Street, used by clerks of the adjutant-general's office, and remained there until 1867. In that year the Secretary of War had them taken to the War Department, where a few were placed on the walls, and the remainder laid on shelves or stuffed in pigeon-holes. A portion of the flags were removed to the Windsor building, and placed on exhibition in the Ordnance Museum in 1874, and others were sent to the same place in 1875. The larger part of the flags still remained in the War Department. In 1882 all the flags, by direction of the Secretary of War, were boxed up and stored in the sub-basement of the department, where they were kept until 1889, when it was found that they were decaying, and the adjutant-general of the army had them removed from the boxes and placed in an upper story, where they could be more readily reached. It has been the practice of the department to return recaptured Union flags to the organizations which lost them, but it has not been the practice to return any Confederate flags to their original owners.

During the first administration of Mr. Cleveland the adjutant-general of the army, R. C. Drum, recommended to the President that the captured flags be returned to the Governors of the States to which the organizations which had lost them belonged. Mr. Cleveland approved this suggestion, and then revoked the order, which had issued on the subject, for the reason that he found he did not have the power to give back the flags without being authorized to do so by act of Congress.

VIRGINIA FLAGS.

The following is a list of the forty-nine flags carried by Virginia regiments during the war, which are now in the War Department:
